No consultation preceded or accompanied the reading. The instrument, you will recollect, was one of considerable length, with several rather special provisions, drawn the night before in great haste, and as a consequence, or from errors in egrossing, in some particulars very obscurely expressed. It was read to him that he might under sign it without all the several to him that he might under sign it without all the several to him that he might under a several to everal as well as a several paroxym of four or five hours previous duration, and then in a dying state?

"I endeavored to." says Mr. Strong, "and believe I did, read the will, audibly, correctly, and distinctly; but at the same time, having noticed that Mr. Mason appeared to labor very much in breathing, and understanding that he was near his end, I read it with as much rapidity as I deemed compatible with a sense of my duty. I read the will through without pausing; and having done so, I asked Mr. Mason in reference to the whole, and not to any particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several particular part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he understood it; for a several part of it, whether he without it he would not have taken, and there are circumstances of suspicion, greater or less, arising from the situation of the testator, the extent of the glit to such person, the claims of others upon the decedent, and the like, proof of instructions may very properly be required, and its absence insisted on as a strong ground of objection to the validity of the instrument.

The law, in such cases, lays much stress on the origin of the instrument, and its previous history. How then, gentlemen—for that is the next subject of inquiry—was the document before you brought into being? Mrs. Rebecca Jones, it is said, received verbal instructions from Mr. Mason, which she communicated to Mr. Isaac Jones and Mr. George Jones, and which they communicated to their counsel, Mr. Strong, who took them down in writing, and immediately, in the night previous to Mr. Mason's death, in great haste prepared from them a draft will, which, the next morning, as early as seven o'clock, before engrossment, he submitted, not to Mr. Mason, but to the Messrs. Jones, who, as soon as they had heard it read, "in great haste?" again, as Mr. Strong testifies, went in quest of the scrivener, as Mr. Strong testifies, went in quest of the scrivener so set him about "making the engrossment."

There is no evidence whatever, unless it be the un-

There is no evidence whatever, unless it be the unsworn, second-hand, or rather third-hand statement, before referred to, that Mr. Mason himself had anything to sworn, second-hand, or rather third-hand statement, before referred to, that Mr. Mason himself had anything to do with these instructions.

Neither Mrs. Jones, nor her brothers-in-law, who alone could lift the veil of obscurity in which this part of the case is involved, has testified before you. The only light, and it is but a glimmering one, proceeds from the incidental remark, made by Mr. Mason to his physician, that he was expecting a will, and wished him to come or stay to witness its execution, or something of like import. And even this is very much diluted by the subsequent statement, that "he never told me that he had given directions to have his will drawn."

Notonly is there a want of evidence to support these alleged instructions, but there is some, and perhaps you may consider it strong, evidence the other way.

Mr. Mason, it appears, at intervals made and destroyed two wills at least, before the date of the paper now in controversy. The first, made some time before the year 1833, was drawn by the late Mr. Boyd; the second, made in that year, was drawn by Vice Chancellor McCoun. As to the contents of the first, we have no knowledge; as to those of the second, the evidence is sample. In it Mrs. Alston, who had then just been married to her present husband, was in every respect as well provided for as her sisters, the Mmes. Jones; and the sons, instead of being made annuitants, dependent in some degree upon the discretion of their sisters' husbands, were made executors themselves, to the exclusion of those husbands. The division of the estate, also, in point of shares, was either upon the basis of proximate equality, or, at all events, far more favorable to those parties than the present dispositions.

The will of 1833 was not only drawn by, but, when executers.

cither upon the basis of proximate equality, or, at all events, far more favorable to those parties than the present dispositions.

The will of 1833 was not only drawn by, but, when executed, was left with, Judge McCoun, thereby showing the testator's confidence, and remained in his hands till August, 1836, when the testator called, and, after cancelding it, left it still in the same custedy.

Why was it cancelled? The precise reason is not known. We have two facts, however, from which we may derive at least a conjectural inference. His nephew, Mr. John Q. Jones, the then cashier, now president of the bank, says that, in walking one day with his uncle, the subject of the Lorillard will, which made so much litigation, came up, and was talked about between them. The nephew, among other remarks in this conversation, observed to his uncle that, upon the whole in his opinion, the disposition made by the law of the Revised Statutes was a good enough will for any man, and he had himself adopted it in regard to his own estate.

Now, gentlemen, as a matter of judicial history, it appears that the final decision, in the Court of Errors, in the lorillard case, upsetting that will on account of the treasts and limitations contained in it, was pronounced in the latter part of December, 1835.

It may be well, then, that this decision, and this conservation consequent upon the it is but conjecture. I admit—led to the cancellation in 1830, of the will of 1833, and to the seeming determination not to make another; leaving (as his nephew expressed it) the Revised Statutes to make a will for him.

His total silence on the subject, when freely and fully conversing on other business, on the four several occasions after the commencement of his illness, testified to by Bir. John Q. Jones and Mr. McCoun, and when it was so necessary, and so peculiarly appropriate, that he should speak, if he contemplated any other will, would seem greatly to fortify this conjecture.

He, perhaps, could be have had his own way, neight bave preferred a disputed will itself) that he intended to make their shares less on that account. His daughter, Mrs. Alston, may have married a husband not over burthened with this world's goods or this world's prudence; but surely that, although a good reason for securing, would be no reason for curtailing (if such be in law the construction of the instrument) the portion of a favorite child.

From whom, then, did the instructions dictated to the lawyer, on the night of the 25th of September, emanate? To my understanding, gentlemen—viewing the whole evidence, and taking all the circumstances into consideration—they did not emanate from the hand, lips, or mind of John Mason; he never wrote them or spoke them, nor, as I think, conceived them. On this point, howeversas a question of fact, you are the sole judges. No fraud, on the evidence, can be imputed to anybody—none, I am fully persuaded, was intended by anybody. There was merely, we are bound to presume, an over anxiety to save a princely estate from the hands of those who, in case they obtained their full shares, might, it was apprehended, spend them too freely or apply them unwisely. All this, it will be seen, proceeds upon the assumption that the will and the instructions are substantially alike. I do not so read them. The Messrs. Jones, as I understand the instructions—which, it should be remembered, are for the first time produced in evidence on this trial, (they were not before the Surrogate)—contemplated a division of the testator's estate into eight equal parts. After enumerating, or rather after numbering, from one to eight—the several branches of the family—they speak of Mrs. Alston's portion and the three sons portions, to be put in trust;'' and, as no other mode of partition is specified or indicated, equality is not only the legal but the natural and necessary presumption, in interpreting the paper. The whole income of the prespective portions, was to become of the engined of the papers. The whole income of the respective portions absolutely; but what was to be

T. Gilbert & Co.'s Plano Fortes, with and without the much admired Æolian. To such perfection have T. G. & Co. brought their Plano, and particularly the inimitable Æolian, that the demand is daily increasing; so much so, that it is with difficulty all the orders can be supplied. At their warerooms, in this city, it is the intention of T. G. & Co. to keep always on hand an assortment as large and varied as can be found at the manufactory, and at the same prices. All their Planos have the metallic frame, and are warranted to stand any climate. The attention of the public is respectfully invited to the fine collection of instruments now in the rooms, and would urge upon those who are contemplating a purchase, the propriety of inspecting T. G. & Co. is stock before buying. The wide spread reputation of T. Gilbert & Co., as manufacturers, renders the publication of certificates or references unnecessary; but to those who wish them, hundreds of testimonials will be furnished. A magnificently carved Plano, with the Æolian, made by T. G. & Co., is to be seen at the St. Nicholas Hotel. Warerooms, 333 Brogdway, corner of Anthony street, second floor. MEDICAL.

PURE VEGETABLE EXTRACT.—DR. MORSE'S INVI. gorating cordial.—Dr. Morse's invigorating cordial, or genital debility, impotency, incontinence, &c. The astonishing success which has attended this invaluable medicine, for loss of masculine energy, physical lasitude, and general prostration, or ony of the consequences of youthful indiscretion, or indulgence of the passions in riper years, renders it the most valuable preparation ever discovered; in fact, as a remedy for the above complaints it stands unrivalled and alone. There is no other reliable remedy, or any that has authentically received the sanction of the medical faculty. The wonderful vegetable production of which this medicine is composed has been tested, and its virtues proclaimed, by the highest names of the faculty of London, Paris, and the chief cities of Europe, as well as by eminent physicians in this country. It is the only infallible remedy for nervous, head and mind complaints—the mental physics so long sought for and never before found—the only agent that can administer to mind diseases. It will remove all nervous affections, depression, excitement, incapacity to study or business, loss of memory, confusion, thoughts of self-destruction, fear of insanity, &c. It will restore the appetite, renew the health of those who have destroyed it by sensual excesses or veil practices.

Dr. Wood, of Massachusetts, writes of one of his patients being cured by using this cordial, thus:—'It gives me pleasure to inform you that one of my patients, while in Boston, procured some of your cordial. He tells me he had not a single emission after he commenced taking it, while before he had two or three a week. When he applied to me,'' says Dr. W. "It hought it hardly possible for him ever to regain his full strength. I prescribed the usual medicines used in these cases in the hospital, but they had no effect. In the meantime, he purchased some of your cordial. Such has effected a cure, I am satisfied not have been so but for this extract, is: "I had head of MEDICAL.

precured some of your cordial. I must say it completely cured me."

Another says......' I was surprised at the effect your cordial had. Why had I not heard of it before? It would have saved me so much expense, besides years of merical and bodily suffering."
